INTERESTING FACTS OF SPORTSMAN'S LODGE

- Logs used in the construction of Sportsman's Lodge are Engleman Spruce from Northwest Montana. They grow at higher elevations and are harvested from standing dead timber that have been damaged from fire. The log walls are 12" in diameter and are approximately 75 years old. The timbers in the trusses are 15" in diameter and are over 125 years old. The three main timbers in the bar area are over 24" in diameter and are well over 200 years of age. The logs were hand peeled and handcrafted to fit together to form this structure.
- The building was designed to capture the spirit of the Rocky Mountain National Park Lodges built in the early 1900's. There are four old lodges still standing in Glacier National Park, Montana. The logs were designed and each handcrafted to compliment the rustic style of the building.
- The two large antique antler chandeliers in the main dining room won the Blue Ribbon in the Lighting Exposition at the 1890 St. Louis World's Fair. The remaining antler chandeliers were designed and constructed in Grand Junction Colorado. All other lighting fixtures are reproductions from the 1920's and are available through Custom Designs of Nashville, Tennessee.
- The furniture was constructed for Sportsman's Lodge by Old Hickory Furniture Company – the same company that supplied the western lodges in the early 1900's. This furniture can still be found today in Old Faithful Lodge in Yellowstone National Park, Wyoming and in the Lodges of Glacier National Park, Montana, as well as some of the Lodges in the Canadian Rocky Mountain National Parks.
- The fish carvings in the boxes were made by artist and woodcarver Ralph Springfield. He spends as much as one hundred hours carving and hand painting each fish. He also handcrafts each box which contain antique lures and memorabilia.
- Selected photographs are from renowned artist John Baeder's private collection. Other decorations and photographs are from our travels throughout the Northwest United States and Canadian Rocky Mountain regions.

Thank you. Enjoy Sportsman's Lodge.
